

ATHLETE'S FOOT

by Christiane S.

January 16, 2009

"... and the Athlete's Foot disappeared!"

Herewith my long-promised – and kind of funny – GNM experience.

Last year, our family expanded to include a dog that was dribbling little droplets of yellow pus (out of his male genitals) onto our beautiful parquet floor. I found that utterly disgusting and two months later I had Athlete's Foot! *

My husband and I were somewhat familiar with GNM, but I did not put the two events together until my husband asked me whether these few droplets of pus could have given me a "Feeling-Soiled Conflict". Well, of course!

Ever since then, I have been running around the house in slippers – and the Athlete's Foot disappeared! (Just what kind of conflict the dog had, we don't know ☺).

GNM is simply fantastic!

* Athlete's Foot is a so-called "Hanging Healing" of a "Feeling-Soiled"-conflict (coming in contact with something repellent), involving the corium skin (the skin layer underneath the epidermis). Christiane must have felt "soiled" on her toes. Most likely, she had once stepped into these puss-filled little clumps. However, by wearing slippers, she was able to eliminate the "track".
