My journey began in March '06 in a small yoga studio in Montreal. I traveled from Pennsylvania to learn about German New Medicine.

On a Saturday afternoon in February '06, I had read the Summary of the New Medicine by Dr. med. Ryke Geerd Hamer. It was the doctor's postdoctoral thesis presented to the University of Tuebingen in 1981.

The foreword talks about the "Iron Rule of Cancer" and the two-phased nature of disease. Dr. Hamer stated, "I submitted my work as a thesis to the University of Tuebingen in the belief that I had discovered the connections linking all cancers." This instantly gave me hope.

As I read these words, my girlfriend was at home recovering from a complete hysterectomy, chemo and radiation "treatments". Her insides were burning and she was in the bathroom all day because it felt she needed to have a bowel movement. But, nothing happened. She was experiencing unexplainable pain. Each visit to the E.R. only resulted in the same response, "It must be the cancer or the effects of the radiation." They prescribed stronger pain killers. Morphine became the drug of choice.

Several months prior, she was diagnosed with cervical cancer at the age of 29. It was a Friday afternoon when she had her follow up visit. The doctor was sitting behind the desk talking with Nikki when I walked in. It wasn't a good feeling. Nikki had a look of fear in her eyes when I sat down next to her. I grabbed her ice cold hand. She told me that she had cancer.

Time stood still. I became completely numb. We started asking questions. "What are we going to do?" "Why is this happening?" There were no explanations, no choices. It had to be chemo and radiation.

Shortly before I left for Montreal, Nikki received a second diagnosis shock. The cancer had "spread" to the liver. Based on my reading, I knew there was another explanation.

Many people do not discover GNM until conventional medicine treatments fail and the person is only left with the damages, both emotionally and physically. Secondary cancers often arise as a result of it.

Nikki passed away in June '06. She knew German New Medicine. I questioned myself. I questioned GNM.

Three years later, I understand and know why Nikki passed away. It wasn't because German New Medicine failed. It was because fear and panic surrounded us. She wasn't given the opportunity to truly heal. The healing phase was being interrupted each time we came in contact with individuals that did not know about the true nature of disease.

It takes more than just knowing about GNM.

My role as a doctor has changed. The Biological Laws created by Mother Nature become the true healer. The doctor becomes the teacher and supports the natural healing by providing a comforting environment - free of fear.

The goal of educating people about GNM is to help them replace old beliefs regarding diseases, especially cancer. The old beliefs are based on theories that propose that our bodies are flawed. The idea that the body can heal without the toxic cocktails is never part of the discussion.

GNM is not the missing puzzle piece practitioners have been looking for during their professional careers. Those trying to "integrate" GNM within their old paradigms are setting themselves up for failure. German New Medicine is not another therapy or modality.

Dr. Hamer's findings provide a scientifically-sound biological system; healing is an integral part of that system. At the same time, GNM is an awareness that empowers the individual, eliminating fears and worries. The person that truly understands the Five Biological Laws does not depend on external sources for healing, because healing can only come from within.

As the doctor's role changes to that of a teacher and supporter, the patient's role becomes more important. Our patients must be willing to accept full responsibility and be committed to their own healing and self-empowerment, otherwise it becomes a struggle.

I recommend practitioners to begin studying GNM with an empty glass. As you gain a greater awareness, your glass will begin to fill with a body of knowledge that has never been presented in the history of medicine. Mankind needs to hear the Truth. Those, who corrupt Dr. Hamer's research, are also corrupting the truth.

This conscious awakening is not about German New Medicine or Dr. Ryke Geerd Hamer. It's about human beings searching for a more peaceful and empowering consciousness in the midst of utter chaos and fear. GNM is coming at a critical point in history. The earlier we make the shift into this new medical paradigm the safer we are.

With Love,

Dr. Chris
